New Year's Eve is just around the corner, which means you'll soon be making the annual New Year's resolution of falling off the crazy-high-grazing diet. And New Year's typically means lots of unhealthy food—decadent holiday cakes, holiday cookies, and deep-fried holiday things. If you're anything like me, you also love those decadent holiday things, and you've probably mauled an entire day's worth of calories in an afternoon. That's why I took over a big chunk of Times Square on New Year's Eve to celebrate the start of 2014. While I made sure to eat healthfully during my visit to Times Square, something about this holiday giant was just too much. Not exactly the best way to keep a tradition going—especially when the Yule log still resides in a storage unit. But it's still kind of neat, as you'll see below, to look up and see the massive family-size letters. According to Len Rosen, vice president and general manager of the Center, "we decided to go into the Time Warner Center as it was constructed originally. The candy store and candy hearts, and the huge video display, and all that was in the building 648931e174
