This is just an example of what a debate looks like in the wake of January's historic elections. A reader posted this to me. • "I will see myself as a Pakistani citizen and I will see myself as a Pakistani secular citizen. The secular citizens like me have had enough. It's time to choose. We do not need more mullahs, we do not need more Wahabi ideology." • "This is a chance to be part of history. We can go back to a time when Pakistan was secular. Let's not blow it!" So now, being secular in Pakistan means...being a secular citizen. Rather than being a human being with rights and duties. Why can't it just be a human being? As opposed to what? My answers, in no particular order: 1. Shouting does not mean very much. It means nothing in the end. If our message is so strong that we are able to spread that message and everyone in the country can hear it
